

It is very important that the regulations regarding broadcast ownership are not loosened. A representative democracy depends on a diversity of media sources. The new regulations threaten our already overly homogenized mainstream media news. This in turn allows a handful of huge media corporations to dictate the tone and content of mass media news reporting. Such comprehensive control by so few corporate interests is a genuine threat to the integrity of the free flow of accurate unbiased information the citizens of this country need to make informed decisions. Because of this, loosening limits on broadcast ownership is inimical to the healthy functioning of the democratic process.
